

A Comedy show to remember!!

Wednesday, July 8, the Silk City Flick Fest sponsorship event An Evening of Comedy brought some of our favorite comedians to the stage in front of a nearly packed house. We would like to thank all those who came out to the City Steam Brew Ha Ha ready to laugh and to share a great night.

We would especially like to thank the comedians who made the night possible and helped raise some much-needed funds for the Flick Fest and for MARC Inc. of Manchester.

Ryan Maloney, a Manchester lad himself and co-founder of the Flick Fest, kicked the night off with an engaging stage presence that has earned him the Funniest New Comedian Award in 1999 and several national commercial spots. After killing it for our Evening of Comedy, Maloney's next big project is swimming with, ahem, sperm whales.

Next up was Flick Fest pal Max Dolcelli who after 30 years in the business barely even needs to speak to get an audience to laugh. You were right Max, we do suck at picking out greeting cards, so think of this as your Thank You note.

In the headlining position was Boston Comedy Festival host and comedian to the troops Jim McCue. Even though he didn't know who SCFF founder Justin Morales or MARC were, or why he was there for that matter, McCue rounded out the night with an excellent performance. And seeing as how he recently performed on a boat with a gaping hole in its side, perhaps finding himself in a basement in Hartford on a stage too small for him was not all that bad.

We would also like to thank Super 8 in Manchester for continuing their sponsorship of the Flick Fest even after getting harassed throughout the night by all three of our performers, you're good sports.

And once again a big thanks to all of you who laughed so loudly; continue to show your support and we will continue to bring fun and entertainment to you our audience. We will keep you posted on all our upcoming events and we hope to see you at the Fest in October!
